Livingstone Council swaps spreadsheets for integrated contract management

Background

Like many Councils, Livingstone had been using spreadsheets to manage and track contracts. This presented challenges in terms of service quality, efficiency and governance. Keeping documentation up-to-date and error-free was difficult, especially with multiple Contract Managers involved. The need to access contracts that were not always available in a central location led to unwieldy, repetitive procedures and was highlighted by auditors as requiring action.

Against this background, the Procurement team was aware of the need to demonstrate governance and probity in contract management processes.

Functionality

The Council had been managing below tender procurement on VendorPanel since 2014, so decided to integrate with the contract management system to better control their hundreds of contracts. Procurement Officers were now able to transfer ownership and ongoing management responsibility for contracts to the relevant personnel, establishing a seamless flow from procurement to contract management.

The platform allows the team to automate processes that were once manual, including setting criteria and defining mandatory tasks. Reminders can be set so that expiring agreements can be renegotiated or re-tendered in good time, and ensures documents like supplier insurances are actively managed.

The Livingstone Shire Council sits nestled along the Capricorn Coast in Queensland, covers approximately 11,776 square kilometres and serves a population of almost 36,000 residents. The traditional custodians of the land are the ancestors of the Darumbal people and the Woppaburra people who inhabited Great Keppel and North Keppel islands.

“Your spreadsheet won’t send you a reminder that you have contracts about to expire.”

This capability is now being used in the governance of Funding Agreements ensuring milestones for acquittals are being met on time.

Results

Livingstone have ensured that all contracts are tracked and managed in a secure, efficient and transparent manner, giving visibility of agreements and related activity to the contract managers involved. Managing the contracts on a single, dedicated platform also demonstrates sound processes and procedures, should an audit take place.

For Alison Morris, the Procurement Officer responsible for contract management, VendorPanel provides the control Council needs while allowing for the collaborative nature of the work.

“With VendorPanel we can all access information on a central register. I can delegate to others if I am away, or even transfer contracts between owners if we need to. Above all, we get a consolidated view of upcoming and overdue tasks across all contracts, so we can reallocate resources or offer assistance to others in the organisation if we see a need. This is essential in helping us manage and reduce risk in our procurement and contract management.”

It’s a huge improvement to the old system, as Alison highlights when she says, “Your spreadsheet won’t send you a reminder that you have contracts about to expire.” And with full visibility from source to contract, the council now has a full audit trail to support good governance and probity.
